Literature review: Factors related to spiritual care of nurses

Abstract

Background: Several factors influence nurses in providing spiritual care including intelligence, attitude, knowledge, and communication. Research objective: to know literature review factors related to the spiritual care of nurses. Research method: a literature review with the method of searching for instruments, population, interaction, comparison, outcomes, context (PICOC). The results of the research based on the literature review there is a relationship between the spiritual intelligence of nurses and the fulfillment of the patient's spiritual service needs with a value (p-value = 0.022), the spiritual intelligence of nurses and the competence of nurses in spiritual care shows a strong relationship (r = 0.652) and has a positive pattern and shows a relationship which is significant (p = 0.001). that attitudes towards spirituality have a positive direct relationship and have a significant relationship with attitudes towards spiritual care (p = 0.003, r = 0.73). correlation (r = 0.358) and significance / probability (p = 0.011) which is far below 0.05 with a 2-tailed significance table using a standard confidence value $p < 0.05$. The results of the analysis to determine the relationship between predisposing factors and Islamic caring behavior obtained a value of $r = 0.348$ with a p-value = 0.007 which is smaller than the alpha value (0.05). Conclusion: actors that affect spiritual caring based on Literature review. The results showed that there was one significant effect, one positive category, one low category, and one poor category. Suggestion: It is hoped that it will become material for further research discussion regarding factors related to the spiritual care of nurses
