- A) Every day of the year people come through the doors of A&E departments. Some walk and some come on stretchers. They may be victims of road traffic accidents, violence, accidents at home, self-harming, poisoning, burns, and so on.
- B) A&E is for people who are seriously injured, perhaps unconscious or losing a lot of blood. Hospitals usually say that A&E departments are only for critical or life-threatening situations.
- C) Some people go to A&E with minor injuries like sprains, insect bites, cuts and nose bleeds. They should not be there. Usually they have to wait a long time before they are examined and sometimes staff will send them away.
- D) When A&E departments have multiple casualties, after a major incident like a train crash, they have to decide who is a priority and who can wait. To do this they use a procedure called triage.
- E) They sort patients into groups. There are those who need immediate surgery, those who are stable but need hospital care, and those who only need first aid. People who are going to die are not a priority for medical care.
