

ABSTRAKSI

Abstract: This research aims to determine the factors that influence students' interest in investing in shares, both directly and indirectly. These factors include investment knowledge, financial literacy, investment motivation, technological advances, and are moderated by risk perception. The population of this research is students in Semarang City in general and students who are members of KSPM. Samples were taken using the purposive sampling method, namely 300 respondents. The data analysis technique used is path analysis assisted by WarpPLS 7.0 software. The research results show that investment knowledge has a negative effect. Financial literacy, investment motivation and technological progress have a positive effect on students' stock investment interest. Then the risk perception variable weakens the relationship between investment knowledge and technological progress on students' stock investment interest. Furthermore, the risk perception variable strengthens the relationship between financial literacy and investment motivation on students' stock investment interest.
